The program to run the drag system is written in Arduino, which is derived from C. This is done by interfacing with the altimeter to determine current altitude and an SD card to record flight data. Using the change in altitude and the change in the time clocked by the processor, the program determines the vertical velocity and altitude of the rocket. These values are then used to determine the time at which the drag system needs to be activated.